Nadine's formal training is not as an artist, but as a scientist, where she spent many years looking at biology rather than painting it. Even so, she has always used art as an escape and over the years has tried many different mediums.

While her first love is pencil drawing she has become captivated with watercolours and the beautiful effects they produce. Although Nadine paints a variety of subjects she is drawn to wildlife painting, with a particular penchant for birds. Her love of birds comes from her childhood in Canberra, with many hours spent watching birds with her family. Watercolours perform perfectly to capture the movement and fluidity of birds in flight.

In 2015 Nadine left her career in science to pursue painting full time, and is emerging as an award-winning artist having just complete her fourth solo exhibition. She hopes to continue to portray the natural world with deceptively loose brush strokes that draw the viewer into the character of the subject.
