Prue was fascinated with the natural world since childhood, when she drew and painted from an early age. She had to choose between art and science at school and chose a degree majoring in Botany & Zoology at Monash University. She then taught in secondary schools and afterwards special education support at many environmental and animal welfare organisations.

She now uses mostly watercolours, pencil and inks to achieve her artworks.

Prue has studied botanical art and now uses those techniques for fauna. She is not interested in background scenery - rather she tries to show the alert activity, intelligence and beauty of mainly Australian native birds and mammals (and sometimes other vertebrates & invertebrates.) often hinting at ecological relationships.
